National FFA Week to be observed in South Carolina

FFA members throughout the state will join in observing National FFA Week, February 20-27. The primary focus of the observance is to emphasize the importance of Agricultural Education at a time when agribusiness is the number one industry in the state and nation.

The observance this year will include the SC FFA-sponsored State Legislators Appreciation Day in Columbia on February 24. The event will include visits by FFA members with their respective legislative delegations, a ceremony on the State House steps and an FFA Week Celebration Luncheon at the State Fair Grounds featuring an address by National FFA President Levy Randolph of Hemet, California.

"The mission of the FFA is to make a positive difference in the lives of students by developing their potential for premier leadership, personal growth and career success through Agricultural Education," according to John W. Parris, state director of public affairs with the FFA organization.

Originally known as the Future Farmers of America, the group's name was changed in recent years to the National FFA Organization to include students who are interested in and preparing for one of the more than 300 career opportunities in the science, business or technology of agriculture. Today, membership of the national organization has grown to over 500,000 with local chapters in every state, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Membership in the organization is about equally divided between rural, suburban and urban communities. There are FFA chapters in some of the largest cities in America because of the increasing interest of students in agribusiness, food science and natural resources.

Barns, Barbecue and Bales of Cotton book still on sale

Clemson's College of Agriculture, Forestry and Life Sciences along with the SC Farm Bureau Foundation is selling a commemorative edition of Barns, Barbecue and Bales of Cotton. This 160-page pictorial collection features many of our state's beautiful and historic barns and rural structures. Other sections highlight pork barbecue (with recipes) and the influence of crops like cotton on our state's history.

All proceeds from the sale of the book will fund South Carolina youth agricultural education and scholarships. To reserve a copy, please send a check made payable to SC Farm Bureau Foundation for $39.95 plus $3.95 for shipping to: Barns, CAFLS, 101 Barre Hall, Clemson, SC 29634.

Munch on Healthy Snacks

National Snack Food Month kicked off Super Bowl Sunday - no surprise there - and runs through the month of February. The month long munch-fest was begun in 1989 to increase snack sales during a month when snack food consumption was traditionally low. Now we're a snacking nation with over $60 billion a year in sales. I have to admit that I contribute to this segment of our economy.

Snacking can fill an important part of the day both nutritionally and socially, but we really need to notice how often we snack, what we choose, and how it affects our mealtimes. Takes some of the fun out when you factor all this in, doesn't it?

But we need to be aware of our snacking habits because South Carolina has the 5th highest percent of obese adults and the 13th highest percent of obese and overweight children ages 10-17 in the nation. And with these statistics come our burdensome health care costs.

One way to a healthier diet especially for children is to provide healthy snack choices. In fact, several bills have been introduced in the General Assembly recently that we support that would help make healthy and locally grown snacks more readily accessible to students.

Our produce growers and processors have also caught on to the idea of providing healthy snack options in schools. Walter P. Rawl Farms in Lexington County, for instance, has introduced the LazyTown line of pre-packaged produce snacks called Sports Candy. Kids love the idea.

The Rawls and others are now trying to get salad bars introduced into every school in the state to encourage healthier eating.

In addition, non-profit organizations like "Eat Smart, Move More . . . SC" coordinate collaborative and sustainable efforts to support healthy eating and active living where South Carolinians live, learn, work and play. On a national level, the First Lady has lent her support to the child obesity issue with an initiative called 'Let's move.'

Aside from these public and private programs and partnerships, parents have to step up to the challenge at home as well. Monitor what our children eat and encourage more exercise. Provide healthier snack choices for a healthier diet.

What does the SCDA do to ensure quality products for a healthy diet? We make sure that the ingredients on the label are actually in the product and vice versa. For instance, we check ice cream to make sure that the fat content designated on the label matches the fat content inside the product. Parents can read the labels and be sure that their children are getting the nutrition they require to be fit. Along with the Department of Health and Environmental Control, we also check commercial food operations throughout the state to ensure that they are clean and sanitary, and we check fruits and vegetables to ensure that chemical residue levels meet tolerance standards. In addition, we help identify locally-grown produce and products at the point of sale. Just look for the Certified SC logo where you shop.

So, if you forgot the hearts and flowers on Valentine's Day, show some love and affection to your family by visiting the produce aisle at the supermarket and choosing fruits and veggies to go with a healthy dip. Try an apple with peanut butter on it. Make your own cookies with the kids from scratch using local Certified SC specialty products. That way you can monitor the ingredients yourself. And, you can always visit www.CertifiedSCGrown.com and click on the SC Specialty Foods Association for a list of local snack foods.

So, if you're going to veg out a little during Snack Month, do it with some healthy fruit or veggie snacks!

Food Check-Out Week

eating healthy on a stretched budget

Food Check-Out Week is February 21-27. It was originally celebrated by the Farm Bureau Federation as the date Americans had earned enough money to pay for their food for a year.

Americans continue to enjoy a food supply that is among the safest, most abundant and most affordable in the world. But since the calculations for Food Check-Out Week were always based on year-old data, the focus has been changed to helping consumers find solutions to eating healthy on a stretched budget. In fact, the Farm Bureau Women's Leadership Committee pilots supermarket tours for consumers to help them increase their knowledge of how to stay on a budget while purchasing healthy food for their families.

Here are few tips for nutritious shopping in a recession from "Fooducate – eat a bit better."

Before going to the supermarket, make a shopping list. And then stick to it. Market research shows that 1 in 2 products in our shopping carts are an impulse buy.

Use coupons wisely. Don't buy a year's worth of canned prunes to save a dollar when the last time you had prunes was at your grandma's in 1982.

Shop less. Plan your shopping trips for once a week at most. Those short trips to the supermarket for one item usually end up with many more items in your shopping bag.

Eat more homemade food. Prepare sandwiches for lunch or bring leftovers to heat in the office microwave.

Don't waste food. Fruit a little too ripe? Toss into the blender, add milk, honey, and ice cubes for a wonderful smoothie. Stale bread? Look for a good bread pudding recipe.

Learn to cook. Really cook. You'll be surprised how easy it is to prepare healthier and cheaper meals yourself. Have the kids join and help. There's no shortage of recipe websites today, some include video tutorials.

And one last tip from the South Carolina Department of Agriculture . . . look for Certified SC Grown label. Visit www.certifiedscgrown.com for a complete list of over 750 members in the program that offer fresh, nutritious produce and products.
